Every Club Makes Money.

The American League, by the way was conceived upon a co-operative and players in the hope that the added patronage would be beneficial to all concerned. That time has passed. No major league club loses money. Even a rank side of the ledger when the frosts of au-tumn inhabit the festive pumpkin so often mentioned by the diligent poet. Base ball is a profitable pastime for the owners, some of whom have been successful in getting the kind of men he wants and some of whom have failed. Charles Somers, the Cleveland magnate, spent liberally, but drew nothing better than a second division crowd. Connie blew money like the fellow who buy 5 cents' worth of peanuts, but he got the stuff. There are the two extremes in the American League in suc-cessful and futile efforts to build up a winning organization.
